ANOTHER AID CONVOY STORY

The very first humanitarian aid convoy I drove in during my ten years as a member of the German Red Cross consisted of twelve aid lorries plus our mobile kitchen lorry. We left Bremen at 1800 hours on Friday with two drivers to each truck, driving through the night all the way south into Austria. The convoy was several hundred metres long and the kitchen lorry, which could travel faster independently, went on ahead to meet up with the main group at pre-arranged stopping points. At these we were able to refuel the lorries and ourselves. Breakfast on the Saturday morning always amused me as it consisted of a steak sandwich, chocolate cake and copious amounts of coffee.

Approaching the city of Linz on Saturday afternoon before we entered the city, we were met in a lay-by that was big enough to take all the lorries and had been closed off for us by the Austrian police. We were then provided with a police escort front and rear into the city and with all our blue lights on we sailed through red traffic lights and, where necessary, even driving on the wrong (left) side of the road! The night was spent in an Austrian Red Cross centre in the city. Sunday morning we were off again to get to the Hungarian border. Most lorries, unless they were carrying perishable goods, were generally not allowed on the German and Austrian motorways at weekends but we had special dispensation as we were carrying humanitarian aid. Going through the international borders was always strange as it didn't matter if there were twelve trucks in the convoy or, as I did on occasion a single truck, it always took four hours to go through customs. In the very rear of each truck we also had a few "goodies" such as children's toys in case any of the eastern European border guards decided they wanted to check our loads. In that event you simply offered the guard something for his own children which invariably had the desired effect
